his recent letters he says:—
"The Irish landlords feel that they can rely on English force to sustain them, and they are careless as to the condition of the country and the feelings of the tenantry. My plan would rob nobody. Everything proposed for Ireland is opposed by the tory and church and landlord party, and yet this party has itself nothing to suggest. Discontent and insurrection may menace the country, but English force is always at hand; so the landlord sleepa in pence and feels that his ronts and his power are secure. If Ireland were 1,000 miles away from us, all would be at once changed. Justice would be done, or the landlord would be exterminated by the vengeance of the people. I see nothing better in the future so long as the people of the United Kingdom are excluded from the House of Commons, and how soon we may be able to have excluded from the House of Commons, and how soon we may be able to have them included is more than I can tell. I do what I can for them, and now they are doing something for themselves. I hope there may be some result before loug."

LITTLE THINGS .- The preciousness of little things was never more beautifully expressed than in the following mor-ceau: "Little marten-boxes of homes are generally the most happy and cosy; little villages are nearer to being atoms of a shattered paradise than anything we know of, and little fortunes bring the most content, and little hopes the least disappointment. Little words are ne sweetest to hear; little charities fly the sweetest to hear; little charities fly furthest, and stay longest on the wing; little lakes are the stillest, and little hearts the fullest, and little farms the best tilled. Little books are the most loved; and when nature would make up anything especially rare and beautiful, she makes it little—little pearls, little diamonds, little dews. Everybody calls that little that they love best on earth. We once heard a good sort of a man speak of his little wife, and we fancied that she must be a perfect little bijou of the Article in Arkansas. in that region, we learned some curious facts concerning the remote county from which he comes. We use the word remote not in its literal sense of distance, but as meaning inaccessible. Of all the counties in the State, McDow-ell, one of the largest in territory, is the least in population and improvements of every kind. It lies on the extreme border, touching Southwestern Virginia. The population was never anything but sparse; but during the rebellion the Union men were driven away, and when they were able to return, the rather than make its assault on the currency of the country.

In the House resolutions of inquiry into the expediency of amending the funding expediency of amending the into the expediency of amending the funding act above cited so as to proyide that Virginia shall be responsible only for the interest on so much of the public debt as may be due from her upon a fair adjustment of that debt; and also that the expediency of repealing or suspending the funding act until Virginia's proportion of said debt shall have been ascertained.

When I learned that a man who never identified himself with the Confederate cause, struck the tyrant low, I thanked God that He had selected an instrument, from the heart of radicalism, right under the tyrant's guns, to deprive America of a radical tool.
